the Invention The present invention relates to an apparatus for providing electronic ticketing of commercial transactions and a method and computer readable medium for controlling such transaction electronic ticketing. 2. Description of Related Art The United States Postal Service's Electronic Data Interchange (EDI) Generic Code F-28G describes a collection of different types of financial transactions that are grouped into different categories. There are categories for payments, vendor invoicing, and other business transactions such as trade accepting (providing merchandise for purchase), bill paying, and general goods and services. The F-28G EDI standard also describes a transaction initiation and transaction flow for each of the different categories. The F-28G standard provides for the input of various types of information into the system, namely the data elements for the transaction, subject characteristics, instructions, and various status information. The F-28G standard provides for the following categories of data elements: a transaction quantity, a transaction type, a transaction name, a transaction recipient, an instruction or order type, a status, a gross payment amount, a payment date, and a payment address or remittance advice address. For example, these data elements are further broken down into different fields as defined in the F-28G standard. One of the transaction types defined in
